GREETING FROM THE PRESIDENT

Welcome to the third issue of South Carolina Libraries, the official journal of the South Carolina Library Association. With this issue, the publication will have reached its first anniversary. A special thanks is due to the editorial team – led by Brent Appling – for their ongoing efforts in providing an open access, professional journal for SCLA librarians to share and learn about topics of interest in our field. I am equally thankful for those who have contributed to the content of the journal. To all SCLA members, let me encourage you to consider joining the ranks of those publishing in South Carolina Libraries by contributing an article or book review.

The year 2015 was a notable year for SCLA. We saw the offering of three successful workshops sponsored by the Information Literacy Round Table, the Paraprofessional Round Table, and the Scholarly Communication Interest Group. We advocated for libraries during National Library Legislative Day and throughout the year. We struggled together and supported one another through the loss of one of our own in Charleston. In October we came together in Columbia from across the state to participate in the SCLA Annual Conference and celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Association. It was a remarkable time to recognize past accomplishments, share current successes, and look forward to another century of activity within SCLA. And now we close the year with the publication of yet another informative issue of South Carolina Libraries to instruct and inspire our efforts in the profession.

As SCLA continues to promote and engage in activities with local and national impact, I encourage you to consider how you, personally, can become involved with SCLA and make a difference. And I do hope you will enjoy this issue of South Carolina Libraries.
