Melville and Whitman in Washington: The Civil War Years and After

June 4-7, George Washington University
Washington, DC

Welcome to Washington, the historical center of the War between the States, and the site of the Melville Society's Ninth International Conference, "Melville and Whitman in Washington: The Civil War and After," June 4-7, 2013. We hope you find the conference an intensely rewarding experience, one that enriches your appreciation of our featured authors and your understanding of the war that Whitman said constituted the true "parturition years" of the American nation.

The Melville Society chose the nation's capital as the site of this conference to coincide with the Sesquicentennial of the American Civil War, 1861-65, and to celebrate the work of two giants of American literature whose lives spanned the nineteenth century. Melville and Whitman both witnessed the War as it raged in the northern Virginia countryside near Washington and attempted to capture the bloody conflict and its complex meaning in their poetry. Their respective collections of poems on the Civil War, Drum-Taps and Battle-Pieces, and Aspects of the War, stand at the center of this conference. But the Civil War is a copious and complex subject, with a long foreground, a long aftermath, and many byways, and our two authors spent a lifetime thinking and writing about the issues that led to and followed this conflict—issues of slavery and politics, regional culture, history, identity politics, nation-building. We are pleased to say the conference robustly engages these many issues and more, while also featuring the life and work of several of Melville's and Whitman's contemporaries—Louisa May Alcott, Emily Dickinson, Abraham Lincoln, Frederick Douglass, Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, and others.

Although Melville and Whitman never met, they had strikingly similar profiles: both were born in 1819 and lived much of their lives in New York City, and died within a year of each other in 1891 and 1892, respectively. Moreover, they both came to Washington during the war, Whitman initially to find his brother, who had been wounded in the furious battle at Fredericksburg, and Melville, to view the war from close at hand, while working on the poems for Battle-Pieces. In fact, Whitman stayed in Washington, living and working here for almost a decade until 1873, so we know he was living in the city when Melville traveled here in April of 1864. It's tempting to think the two of them, both avid walkers, might have crossed paths or seen one another, if only at a distance. Nonetheless, surely their shades or shadows are here still, in this city that prides itself on preserving its rich history. As you make your way around the old downtown streets of Washington, we hope you might be able to imagine their presence still and come to experience something of the city they knew, the better to appreciate their legacy 150 years later.

GREETINGS AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We know you will want to take advantage of your time in Washington by visiting some of the city's outstanding museums, galleries, and historical sites—several featuring exhibits on the Civil War—and exploring the rich history and architecture of official Washington and the residential neighborhoods as well. To help you with that effort, we have included a map of Foggy Bottom and the downtown area of the city, a list of local sites of special historical interest, and a list of restaurants on campus or within just a few blocks of Marvin Center. In your folder, too, you will find a “Golden Triangle” pamphlet containing a Metro map and a more extensive list of downtown restaurants, all within walking distance or a short cab ride of the conference site, and other useful information, on everything from banks and drug stores to “night life.” Yes, there is night life in buttoned-down Washington! Another useful pamphlet—a gem!—is a walking tour of Walt Whitman's Washington, provided by our colleagues Kim Roberts and Martin Murray.

In your rambles, please be sure to visit the conference-sponsored exhibit across the street from Marvin Center, at the Luther Brady Art Gallery, on the 2nd floor of the Media and Public Affairs (MPA) Building, 805 21st Street, NW. This exhibit features the art of two conference participants, Matt Kish and Doug Paisley, who will be talking about their work in session 33, at 3:30 p.m. on Thursday afternoon, June 6th, in Marvin Center 309. Please note also there will be a reception honoring the artists at the Luther Brady Art Gallery, 5:00-6:00 p.m. on Thursday, immediately following their presentations. All are welcome.

Please also watch for notices about times for book signings by conference participants in the GWU Bookstore, on the lower level of Marvin Center.

Finally, if you have questions, please go to the registration table on the 3rd floor of Marvin Center. And if you have a (non-medical) emergency or just need help, call Chris Sten at (301) 237-7836 or Joe Fruscione at (202) 631-5017.
