"Good Things Come In Small Packages"

It is the function of Shepard's Citations to give you the parallel references and complete history of every case. Then, its interpretation by the state and federal courts and citations in the selected case reports and law reviews.

Within a very limited space and in a few minutes you have run your case down to date and located other cases in point and articles on your subject which no other method of research would disclose.

And in a similar way you test your statute law for amendments, repeals, etc. and for judicial construction which is so essential. Then you should also run your citing cases down to date.

It's compact, simple and very economical both in time and expense.

And you have the reassuring feeling and confidence that you have thoroughly tested your cases and statutes and that you are always up to date.
