Federal agency backs out of lease

The U.S. Department of Justice is negotiating ending its 20-year lease of USC’s old business school building. The State reported Monday

The reason for the decision the Justice Department made to drop the lease has not been made clear, but Surratt will suffer an annual loss of $1.3 million in revenue as a result.

“We’ll turn it into a win for USC,” Ed Walton, USC’s chief operating officer, told The State.

The lease was supposed to accumulate $106 million for the university and bring over 210 “high paying” jobs to Columbia.

The Executive Office for United States Attorneys was supposed to move from Washington, D.C., to USC’s Close-Hipp building by 2017, but the lease would not start until $2 million was spent on upgrades. The Justice Department began negotiating with the school to sever the agreement, even before the upgrades were started.

With 50,000 square feet of classrooms, the Close-Hipp building could be used for added classroom space, however, the building is in need of about $8 million worth of work to replace heating and air-conditioning systems.

According to The State, Walton does not see the situation affecting tuition and does not anticipate that there will be a tuition increase to help cover the lost revenue. Close-Hipp was closed on Oct. 31 and will remain closed until a deal is made with the federal agency, Walton told The State.

The deal was referred to as one of the most significant developments for the University of South Carolina in decades,” in a USC-news release.

“On average I practice two to three hours a day,” Nealey said. “No matter what, I still find time to play music.”

As a singer-songwriter hailing from Florence, South Carolina, Nealey grew up with southern roots but draws a lot from other alternative artists, such as Tame Impala, Arctic Monkeys and her personal favorite, Kings of Leon.

“I played softball before I started softball. Pretty much as soon as I could pick up a bat, I was playing.”

But Surratt said she knows her time as a competitive softball player is limited. In fact, this upcoming season will be her last, save for the possibility of playing for a company softball team in the future.

Despite seeing success in softball during her high school years, Surratt decided to hang up her cleats in favor of a full-time accounting job that she will begin in October.

“In the past something that has been really steady in my life, so it’s going to be hard to think in just a few months it will be over,” she said. “But I feel like I’m to a point where I’m ready to give back to the game and maybe help the younger girls growing up. I definitely won’t be completely away from a ball field, but I just won’t be the one playing.”

The 2015 season will mark the final year of eligibility for Surratt, who arrived on campus nearly five years ago. Surratt tossed a no-hitter in her first appearance as a freshman for the Gamecocks in 2010, and also knocked in a run while going 2-for-4 in her debut.

She finished her freshman campaign with a 1.38 ERA while accumulating an 8-8 record. However, after the season, Surratt was forced to undergo Tommy John surgery, which effectively ended her sophomore year before it even started.

But being forced to sit out a year turned out to be a blessing in disguise for the Gaffney, South Carolina native.

Surratt used the year to get ahead in school and

Amber Alert cancelled for Alexis Deas

The Amber Alert for Alexis Deas was cancelled after the 14-year-old girl was found safe. According to WLTX, Deas was located early Monday morning in Lander county near a family member's home, according to the South Carolina Law Enforcement Division. She was reported as a missing child in Cherokee County.

Before her disappearance, Deas was last seen around 10 a.m. Friday at New Heights Middle school in Jefferson, South Carolina. Reports say that the left with Harland Donnell Melton, her 43-year-old stepfather. Sheriff Jay Brooks reported that the police had information from the family implying Deas and Melton were having an inappropriate relationship.

Police believe the pair may have been traveling to Texas, and police said that Melton still remains at large.

— Last Wednesday, an officer observed a white Ford Escort SUV making an abrupt turn on Barnwell Street. The vehicle traveled left of the center line and failed to stop in its lane. The officer stopped the car near its intersection with Pendleton and Barnwell streets. The officer asked the man driving the car for his license and registration and observed the odor of alcohol from his mouth. The man admitted to using alcohol before he got in the vehicle. The driver's speech was “slurred, slow and thick.” Another officer arrived on scene and was administered a series of standardized field sobriety tests. The driver displayed signs of impairment on each test. He was arrested and transported to the City of Columbia Police Department. The driver rejected the submit to a breathalyzer test, however, resulting in the suspension of his license. He was transported to the Alvin C. Glenn Detention Center and his vehicle was impounded and towed.

QWOP-like appeal. Dramatic music swells as you functionally incapable climber fumbles his way to the top. Limbs will get tangled up in your climber's body.

So, who are Death Grips? What's all the hype about this band? Well, for one thing, they're one of the weirdest hip-hop duos the world has ever seen. Here's an entry level guide to the Internet's beloved alternative rap group.

The goal of "Mount Your Friends" is simple: You have to climb up increasingly tall towers of your friends, using each button on the controller to control each limb. Once you get to the top, you become the next link in the man-chain, and it’s the next person’s turn to climb.

At first, "Mount Your Friends" is a QWOP-like appeal. Dramatic music swells as you functionally incapable climber fumbles his way to the top. Limbs will get tangled up in other limbs, and your climber will inevitably fall down to earth.

But once you get used to the controls, it becomes a fun, competitive sporting event — just one with shirtless men climbing over each other. The game’s physics engine allows for a lot of advanced technique, like launching yourself upward or rolling for momentum. It’s all against the clock, and when a room is up to shows, particularly Lollapalooza 2013, where they were booked, decided not to show up and were replaced with Skrillex's head. Needless to say, fans were furious.

Regardless of how bad things might get, Nealey sticks to her motto: "stop it. Just the pure love of music is enough to cure discouragement when practicing.

MOUNT YOUR FRIENDS

"Mount Your Friends" is a bizarre pleasure. It’d be amazing enough just to watch the Epic Records told Death Grips that they wouldn’t release the album with explicit cover art. As a result, the duo leaked their own album anyway, and they were immediately dropped from the label. There’s a story behind the cover. This album wasn’t just some sort of prank — they’re completely serious about their art.

When asked to describe Death Grips in three words, fans responded with:

"Heavy Afro-futuristic jams" "Angry art project" "Teen hell music"

Is it performance art? Who knows, but it seems like they love to make people mad. In fact, once they hit their peak popularity and started getting the attention they deserve last summer, Death Grips announced their break up on July 2 and canceled all their upcoming shows.

Like a horrible ex-girlfriend, they’ve kept their fans on the hook by releasing a music video and a surprise EP. As a result, they didn’t perform at their upcoming shows.

THE LOW DOWN

Death Grips is made up of rapper Stefan "I'm not cool with my name" Redmond and drummer Zach Hill. Together they make music that's somewhere between noise music, experimental rap and intense screaming. Regardless of how unappealing that sounds, the crowd loves them.

When asked to describe Death Grips in three words, fans responded with:

"Heavy Afro-futuristic jams" "Angry art project" "Teen hell music"

"Something else entirely" And that basically sums it up.

So what makes them weird? Well, they’ve been together since 2010 and they didn’t catch a lot of attention until around 2012 or 2013 — it wasn’t until they put a photo of male genitals, clearly taken in a bathroom, on the cover of their album "No Love Deep Well" that they got into the spotlight.

This album wasn’t just some sort of prank — they’re completely serious about their art. Erika Ryan

In budget battle, military wins either way

Ross Abbott
Third-year business student

Another year, another pointless debate about the budget of the federal government. As always, Democrats generally are decrying income inequality and plan or using it by promising to use the government to redistribute wealth and “taxing and spending” our way to prosperity. Republicans, for their part, are fighting to keep our country safe from imaginary demons by trying to increase the Department of Defense budget which is already the highest in the world, making up almost half of total global military expenditures, or more than the next 10 countries combined while claiming to be the “small budget” party.

The budget proposal budgeted by the Obama administration increases total spending by $200 billion for 2015, up to $4.4 trillion in total spending.

Another way to look at the deal is to see how much of the increase went towards the military. The Department of Defense budget (which is already the highest in the world, making up 21.3 percent of GDP) proposed at that time by the Department of Defense all the way up to 2015.

Strom's failure embodied in his fitness center

So, before I talk about Strom Thurmond, I am obliged to give a substantial part of my column over to Nicky Finney's 1993 poem "Dancing with Strom." The men's basketball team will play against the Razorbacks for the first time in this season in Fayetteville, AR.

Defensively, South Carolina has scored strong throughout the season. The Gamecocks held Georgia to just 30 points against Georgia, which is the 17th-best mark in the nation. Still, South Carolina will have to match up with an offense that is expected to contend for an NCAA tournament bid.

Offensively, South Carolina has also performed well. The Gamecocks held Georgia to just 50 points against Georgia, which is the 14th-best mark in the nation. Still, South Carolina will have to match up with an offense that is expected to contend for an NCAA tournament bid.

The starting lineup for South Carolina against Arkansas is still up in the air. The Gamecocks will be without key players due to injuries.

The Gamecocks will be looking to continue their road trip and face Vanderbilt on Saturday, February 7.
