Myron Berry, a parent of a visiting high school senior, said he was impressed by the quality and quantity of the contestants.

The Gamecocks managed only four hits on the day off of VU pitching, but one of those hits came at an especially important time. Junior third baseman Adam Morgan doubled in Marley Beary with two outs, giving Carolina an important insurance run that put the Gamecocks up 2-0.

Health Care Reform

U.S. Rep. James Clyburn spoke about health care reform during the third annual James E. Clyburn Health Disparities Lecture Friday morning. The event, sponsored by the Arnold School of Public Health, was part of a lecture series that coincides with national Public Health Week. The lecture series is a joint effort between Clafl in University and USC’s Institute for Partnerships to Eliminate Health Disparities.

“I am honored to be delivering this lecture at an historic time in our nation with regards to health care,” Clyburn said in a press release. “Health disparities are always in the forefront of my service in Washington, and I am pleased that as we celebrate Public Health Week, we have the opportunity to refl ect on real positive changes for public health in America.”

According to a press release, the event was meant to bring together researchers and public health professionals “to discuss ways to eliminate the public health disparities for diseases prevalent among South Carolina minority residents.”

Organization holds fundraiser for trip to national conference

National Association of Black Accountants aims to strengthen minority professionalism

Derek Logghe

The National Association of Black Accountants held a breakfast fundraiser at Applebee’s on Broad River Road Saturday morning.

USC Chapter President Justin Muller, a third-year accounting student, said the group is fundraising to travel to its national conference in Houston this summer.

Muller said the organization went to the Atlanta conference in October last year, and they hope to go again during the summer in order “to promote black professionalism at its finest.”

Since 1969, NABA has sought to strengthen the infl uence of minorities in the accounting and finance professions. Some of its mission statements include promoting and developing the professional skills of its members, ensuring long-term financial stability, providing adequate resources to implement chapter, regional, and national programs and encouraging and assisting minority students in entering the accounting profession.

NABA participates in humanitarian activities throughout the year. It helped out during the MLK Day of Service and the Tiger Burn and has its own events, such as HalloWonka, Books for the Holidays and a canned food drive with the New Life Baptist Church.

NABA decided to work at Applebee’s after third-year accounting student Tiffany Brown made the suggestion.

“My aunt and her sorority did one there so she suggested it to me,” Tiffany Brown said. “I thought it was a great idea.”

Muller said the people working at the restaurant were very helpful and willing to give extensions due to time constraints.

Douglas Brown, a second-year accounting and international business student, is the vice president of professionalism and said the Moore School of Business is one of the sponsors that funds its operations. Douglas Brown said the group writes letters to explain its initiatives to sponsors.

The organization, which welcomes those majoring and minoring in business, has “Lifting as we Climb” as its offi cial motto, but the students at USC created their own, known as “Professional at its finest.”

Douglas Brown said this is only their third year of active status here at USC, and they are making strides to build rapport.

Chad Peery, a fourth-year accounting student and former NABA president, is very confident about the future of the organization after he leaves college to work in Los Angeles for an internship.

“Justin Muller has been a good right-hand man and will do a superb job,” Peters said. “Overall, they are a strong suit of students that are underrepresented, but it’s our third year. We [are] making big moves.”

The State of Columbia reported that no state rules were broken by the bid cancellations earlier this month, but architects said the unannounced move so late in the bidding process was costly for them.

Lately, city financier Darla Moore has donated millions of dollars to USC. As a university trustee, the businesswoman is partly what attracted her to the University.

McDonald, whose husband's firm Watson Tate Savory was one of those members going through the process of trying to get shortlisted because of the wishes of a donor.

Architects, said it is very unusual to cancel a bidding process because of funding problems, Adrienne Montare, president of the South Carolina chapter of the American Institute of Architects, said it is very unusual to cancel a bidding process because of the wishes of a donor.

“It is a rare event that a project is advertised and that our members go through the process of trying to get shortlisted and to have that pulled from the public process,” said Montare, who represents the business sector that will bear her name, “said former South Carolina Gov.

Carolina breaches business etiquette

Every spend big bucks on a date and never get a call back? That’s kind of what happened to four Columbia firms incurring the bid for the new Moore School of Business.

Except they didn’t waste it. It was more like $50,000.

According to an article in The State, “USC taxes bids, donor chooses architects,” by Jeff Wilkinson, USC, in the near future will be handing out the money. This was after the firms spent time their time and money.

There is a name for that kind of move, and the Daily Gamecock encourages it. Figure 1 is will to print it. Suffice to say, this move shows a lack of respect for business manners.

Government’s power to decide between life and death for citizens could have destructive consequences

Reports made earlier in the year about secret orders by the Obama administration to authorize the assassination of members of the Al-Qaeda, Al-Walikhi is, an American-born Islamic cleric, Anwar Al-Awlaki, is on a proverbial hit list used by the Government’s power to decide whether the government wouldn’t give foreign terrorist nationals in the U.S. accused of terrorist activities to be taken out. On the subject of the Al-Qaeda administration, lead by the Bush administration, but it was never used on American citizens. President Obama ordered the CIA to kill Anwar Al-Awlaki wherever he is found, even if he’s on a battlefield. It would seem that we are progressing from Guantanamo Bay, where we hold terrorist subjects without charging them and use torture as a means to gain evidence, to now giving the government the right to just shoot them. Before the government wouldn’t give foreign terrorist suspects due process or access to an attorney; now those restrictions are enhanced even more with regard to American citizens. Foreign citizens Americans didn’t seem to care when the civil rights of non-Americans were taken away once and time again. Maybe they will care when those rights are taken away from American citizens. When same constitutional rights apply to foreigners as well as American citizens.

Anwar Al-Awlaki is believed to be an operative of al-Qaeda, according to intelligence officials in the Obama administration. Even though he advocates the overthrow of the U.S. government, he has not attempted to overthrow the government and therefore is not committing treason but just stirring stuff. I’m sure the intelligence officials are right that Al-Awlaki is the mastermind behind numerous terrorist plots. It’s not like they ever get anything wrong before (Iraq War). Well, we will never know if he is the mastermind behind these terrorist plots because the special forces killed him about 45 bodies in his hole.

While the Bush administration should be held responsible for its atrocities in regard to the assassination of American citizens while making the ultimate tyrannical executive power for war crimes. When will the cries against the Bush administration be answered? After the administration has made the ultimate tyrannical executive power for war crimes. When will the cries against the Obama administration be answered? This power grab will inevitably, if our government instead of making the ultimate tyrannical executive power for war crimes. When will the cries against the Bush administration be answered? After the administration has made the ultimate tyrannical executive power for war crimes. When will the cries against the Obama administration be answered? This power grab will inevitably, if not during Obama’s administration, lead to Americans in the U.S. accused of terrorist activities to be taken out. Take something that somebody could do with this type of power. He or she can have any political enemies or people who disagree with their policies to take out. This is a partisan issue, so conservatives and liberals should agree to buy into non-ideological rhetoric stating that this policy is needed to win the War on Terror. The change platform that Obama ran on seems to be changing from the current oligarchic Kromlakovich in Washington, D.C. to an absolute dictatorship. The impact of the government’s ability to murder U.S. citizens overseas cannot be overestimated. The government should be held accountable for its atrocities in regard to the assassination of American citizens.

The only problem is that it comes on right smack in the middle of last year's Peabody winner, "Lost," which it escaped away from its highly-anticipated series finale. Luckily for you, however, both come up on Elsie at 3 a.m. on Wednesday. We recommend tuning in for the first "Glee" in..."

2. "Modern Family" (ABC, 9 p.m., April 10)

Christopher Lloyd and Steven Levitan's mocumentary-style sitcom also earned a Peabody this year, thanks to sharp writing from the "Frasier" vet's. Tune in tonight for the season premiere of "Modern Family.""It's like a combo of "Brecht" and "Machinal," which has Its (Ed O'Neil) putting down the model airplanes and ceasing the squabbling (if only for a moment) with his estranged wife, Claire (Edie Falco), to join forces with son-in-law Phil (Matthew Broderick) and Emma (Jayma Mays). Does this mean a half-season full of convergence obstacles to their romance? We really, really hope not.

3. "Doctor Who" (BBC America, 9 p.m., April 17)

of everyone’s favorite 96-year-old, time-traveling, intergalactic warrior returns Saturday. If, like most people, you don’t understand how a show that premiered in 1963 and has broadcast 758 episodes could maintain continuity after switching show runners and lead actors every couple years, tune in at 8 p.m. for “The Ultimate Guide,” which will take a look at the series’ long-standing mythology. The main event starts at 9 p.m. with the unveiling of the show’s 11th Doctor, played by Matt Smith, whose inaugural episode sees him saving the world from galactic policemen on quite a deadline.

4. “30 Rock” (NBC, 8-9 p.m., April 22) Have you been hurting for new episodes of “30 Rock”? How about the reprisal of Julianne Moore’s questionable Boston accent as Nancy, Jack Donaghy’s high school crush? Time in Thursday for a double dose of the NBC comedy, with two episodes sandwiching a new episode of “The Office.” In “Lee Marvin vs. Derek Jeter,” Jack (Alec Baldwin) will finally have to make a choice between Nancy and Avery (Elizabeth Banks). And later, at 9:30, Jack will have to make another tough choice to appease the NBC janitors in “Khonani.” Of course all that pales next to the show’s best bromance, as Kenneth (Jack McBrayer) will try to teach Tracy (Tracy Morgan) how to become a better husband.

DeMars closes out final match at USC

For Carolina, a call for more accountability

Whichever may come this fall for Carolina Football, this past winter was the season that Carolina fans will call "the catalyst." With tough words from both ESPN’s Chris Low and Fox Sports’ Lee Corso, South Carolina head coach Steve Spurrier has brought up USC’s poor performance against UConn in the Papajohns.com Bowl.
