2007

Joggling Boards

Saddler Taylor

University of South Carolina - Columbia, taylor7@mailbox.sc.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarcommons.sc.edu/mks_staffpub

Part of the History Commons

Publication Info
http://www.sc.edu/uscpress/books/2006/3598.html
© 2007 by University of South Carolina Press

This Article is brought to you by the McKissick Museum at Scholar Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Staff Publications by an authorized administrator of Scholar Commons. For more information, please contact dillards@mailbox.sc.edu.
Juggling boards. Simple in design, a juggling board consists of one plank, or seat, supported by stands at each end. The plank length varies, sometimes extending as long as sixteen feet. Variations include juggling boards that have stands with curved bottoms resembling the rockers on a rocking chair. This allows the user to "juggle" both up and down and sway from side to side. Made with just about any type of wood, fir and cypress are two of the more common varieties. Lauded for their ability to ease arthritic pain and other forms of bodily discomfort, juggling boards have also remained popular with romantic couples, mothers trying to soothe a fussy infant, and children intent on enjoying hours of play.

The juggling board is a tradition with a long history in South Carolina. While the origin of the juggling board has fallen into the murkiness of local legend, they were quite common on the coast by the 1880s. One of the more enduring creation stories involves the Kinloch and Huger families of Acton Plantation in Sumter County. In 1803, after the family patriarch was widowed, a sister moved to the plantation to care for the household. She suffered from severe rheumatism and the "first" juggling board was designed and built for her relief. The popularity of the juggling board spread quickly and, while they have generally been concentrated along the coast, they were also used in other parts of the state. Like the rocking chair, the juggling board has long been a fixture on porches in Pawleys Island, Georgetown, Charleston, and throughout the lowcountry.

SADDLER TAYLOR