Students save at Carolina Styles

Campus salon offers value, community
Sarah Peterson 10/17/2009

Snap. Buzz. Swish. All of these sounds can be heard on the third floor of the Russell House. Little-known Carolina Styles, a full service salon, is tucked upstairs in the Russell House.

Wanda Davis, manager and head stylist, has been working at Carolina Styles a long time. "She would bring kids for a haircut and you’d never hear from them again," Davis said.

As she swept hair off the floor and serviced at the office of University Technology Services said, "It was a wonderful victory for our team, our university and all Gamecocks." Sprower said, "It was a defensive struggle, and our defense was sensational... We were able to get a big win at home, especially for our fans.

Mayor revokes no-chase call

The mayor of a small South Carolina town Thursday said she’s allowing her police officers to run after suspicious people again, three weeks after banning the practice.

Wellford Mayor Sallie Peake said she’s revoking her Sept. 2 order, which she had still preferred not to lose—after talking with Spartanburg County prosecutor Trudy Deese.

“They can run, jump, climb trees, tumble, whatever they want to do,” she told WLTX-TV reporter Tonya Terry.

“This is a city that has a motto of, ‘You can’t do that anymore.’ We just said, ‘Forget it,’ ” Peake said.

“Now, we’re back to the way we were, and the public is happy and content with that.”

Neither Peake nor the police chief immediately returned subsequent messages from The Associated Press.

On Monday, the mayor of 14 years said she issued the order after a city officer found a poster under a front door while chasing a “guy who had some crack on him” and had to be out of work for several days on workers’ compensation pay. “Noticing the post was stealing or breaking into a home at the time, she said she didn’t consider the drug possession a crime, and said the town of 2,100 couldn’t afford the increased insurance costs.

Though the mayor had allowed police to chase two town-issued cars in a month, “whenever,” she said, “she would meet in a two-vehicle court of a month.”

The two-sentence memo.

Many students are not aware of Blackboard’s tracking features. Though students may not know about this feature, Brown feels that students should not be concerned about how it may or may not affect their grade. “Faculty are busy people and are more interested in student success, than failure. I don’t think anyone would be examining statistics to look for suspicious behavior just to go after a student,” Brown said.

Brown said professors use this tool to not only benefit but get your hair cut and make it to class on time without going out of your way.”

Davis said that Carolina Styles is for everyone. Students, faculty, staff and community members are all welcome. Whether man or woman and no matter your ethnicity, Carolina Styles can come up with the cut that’s right, Davis said.

“If you like doing hair, you’ll do all types,” Davis said. Wallace said that hair is straight, curly, wavy — it’s just hair.

Walk-ins are always welcome, and Davis will greet you with a hearty hello and direct you to one of the comfy stylist chairs. For about $15, you can walk out of the Russell House looking better than you walked in. Carolina Styles accepts the CarolinaCard and is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

DHEC control should not pass to governor

If a bill proposing an overhaul of the S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control had made it to the governor’s desk, it would have been headered and debated, then likely turned down.

While we agree DHEC needs some major work to reflect the missions and goals it was intended to help accomplish, enacting additional legislation is not the answer. The state’s health board is not a place that needs to be micromanaged. If the current administration can’t manage to do its job right, then it’s time for the state’s lawmakers to do it for them. We still have a long way to go to catch up to the other states that are already making strides with public health initiatives. It would be a bad idea for the governor to appoint someone one of our own is asking for trouble.

And the resistance to this particular overhaul proposal is not hinging on Sanford. — it would be a bad idea no matter who the governor is. A figure who has the entire state to account for, represent and watch over should not be appointed and should not be allowed to — there has been no kind of control. Anytime more power is consolidated in the hands of a single executive, local, balances becomes the government. Legislation that allows the board to check and problems are bound to be aroused. It’s basically a recipe for disaster.

If something goes wrong within a company, for example, the man in charge obviously needs to take a step back and make decisions, but that does not mean he needs to take on the responsibility. Anywhere he needs to involve the processes of correct dates are bound to be made within the management under him. When the “quality of applicants” is less likely than before, students are the other students, or they are African American students, this suggests that there are more minority students in color that South Carolina that meet USC’s increasing standards. The drop in minority students is not only a situation at USC, but many public competitive institutions nationwide are experiencing similar trends at both the undergraduate and graduate levels. However, as recently reported in The State Newspaper (“Black enrollment down at USC; Clemson, "Feb. 26, 2009), smaller regional colleges and universities have seen an increase in the number of African-American students.

Are these institutions’ requirements lower than standards at USC, and how will these students doing academically and socially in comparison to other ethnic/racial groups? Why are minority students choosing to attend these smaller colleges and universities in increasing numbers?

If the reasons for not attending relate to perceptions of the campus climate and socio-economic determinants, this might be the primary reason students choose not to attend. Also, recruiters may need to know more about those cultural identifiers and economic determinants that are important to various segments of the prospective student pool, in order to make decisions about who should be recruited from various socioeconomic backgrounds.

Also, how is diversity represented among those who do not meet the undergraduate admissions full-time staff have for the previous 12 years, in order to make decisions about those who choose not to attend.
