The South Carolina Archaeology Public Outreach Division (SCAPOD)

The South Carolina Archaeology Public Outreach Division (SCAPOD) is a division of the South Carolina Institute for Archaeology and Anthropology (SCIAA) that is committed to sharing the results of archaeological research and volunteer opportunities with the public. SCAPOD provides educational programs, public archaeology by the Savannah River Archaeological Research Program (SRARP), and various other outreach efforts.

Public Archaeology at the Charleston Museum

The Charleston Museum is located on Meeting Street in downtown Charleston, SC, and is the oldest museum on the southeastern seaboard. It has a wide range of exhibits and programs aimed at educating visitors about the history and culture of the Lowcountry, including Native American artifacts and other cultural artifacts from the region.

Public Archaeology at the Allendale Paleoamerican Expedition

The Allendale Paleoamerican Expedition is an opportunity for the interested public to participate in archaeological excavations of Pleistocene and early Holocene sites. The expedition is sponsored by the University of South Carolina and the South Carolina Institute for Archaeology and Anthropology.

Public Archaeology at the Piedmont Archaeological Studies Trust (PAST)

PAST is a non-profit 501(c)(3) organization that provides public archaeology opportunities in the Piedmont region of South Carolina. PAST has a variety of programs and activities, including archaeological excavations, educational programs, and public archaeology events.
