James Johnson Named Director of South Carolina State Library

James B. Johnson, Jr., has been appointed Director of the South Carolina State Library effective June 2 according to George H. Seago, Jr., Chairman of the State Library Board.

Previously serving as Deputy Director for Library Development, Johnson succeeded Betty E. Callaham, who headed the agency since 1979.

Johnson, a native of Louisiana, is a graduate of the University of New Orleans and holds a master's degree in library science from Louisiana State University.

Active in professional organizations, Johnson is currently Federal Relations Coordinator for SCLA, the Association of Specialized and Cooperative Library Agencies, and the Southern Conference of Libraries for the Blind and Physically Handicapped. He is a member of the South Carolina Governor's Committee on the Employment of the Handicapped and past president of the Quail Creek Neighborhood Association. He is active in the Parent Teacher Organizations of Lower Richland High School and St. Joseph's School and is a volunteer coach for the City of Columbia's girls softball and tee-ball programs.

Having joined the State Library staff in 1972, Johnson was Institutional Library Consultant and the Director of the Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped before becoming Deputy Director in 1979. He is married to the former Debby Clawson of Lake Charles, Louisiana, and has two daughters.
Here’s the bad news:
You may have noticed that the December issue of News & Views came out in January, the February issue came out in March, and the April issue didn’t come out at all. That just goes to show that in the publishing business, the faster you go, the behinder you get.

So, rather than continue to publish behind schedule, I’ve decided to bite the bullet and combine two issues.

Now I know this combined issue will antagonize a few serials librarians and cause a flurry of claims, but for my own peace of mind (and that’s very important to me, anyway) it’s the best solution. That way I won’t stay awake at night thinking how far behind the newsletter’s getting. So, by just fixing the cover up a little, I declare News & Views to be caught up.

And here’s the good news:
In response to our want ad in the last issue for an advertising manager, Deanna Lewis, a member of the Catalog Department at the Thomas Cooper Library, volunteered to do the job.

Regardless of Herbert White’s recent poo-pooing of voluntarism in American Libraries, if we didn’t have voluntarism we wouldn’t have a News & Views, or even an SCLA, for that matter.

So, thank you Deanna—your efforts are very much appreciated. We hope to see some ads in News & Views real soon.

HURRY, HURRY, HURRY TO THE LIBRARY

The circus is coming to the public libraries of South Carolina this summer. The summer reading program for children is using the slogan, "Hurry, Hurry, Hurry to the Library: Read Under Our Big Top," to entice children to visit the library and participate in vacation activities designed to stimulate reading. Colorful posters and circus designs decorate the children's areas of libraries around the state and invite participation in the reading program which begins as the school year ends.

Each year, public libraries in South Carolina plan summer activities around a statewide theme and promote the idea that reading for enjoyment is an important component of summer vacation for children and families. The program is coordinated by the South Carolina State Library and partially supported by funds from the Library Services and Construction Act which are administered by the State Library. The theme is chosen by a committee of children's librarians and developed by a graphic artist into promotional materials used throughout the state. The materials designed by Susan Craig of Columbia for the 1989 Program won a 1990 Bronze ADDY Award given by the Columbia Advertising Club for excellence in printed materials. Jane McGregor, Children's Services Consultant, coordinates these activities.

This is the tenth consecutive year that South Carolina libraries have carried out a statewide summer reading program, and participation has steadily increased. In 1989, over 34,000 children registered for the program and group activities attracted over 46,000 children. Emphasis has always been on reading for pleasure and the program is non-competitive, allowing children to read at their own pace and to follow individual interests. Studies in other states indicate that summer reading program participants retain vocabulary and comprehension skills better than non-participants and show improvement in reading skills upon return to school in the fall.

Public libraries in the state also participate in the summer theater tour of libraries. Since 1984, local libraries and the South Carolina State Library have jointly sponsored performances by a children's theater group. A grant from the South Carolina Arts Commission has partially underwritten the cost, and this summer, Chopstick Theater of Charleston and Steve Harris, Clown Mime, of Irmo will share the tour. Sixty-three performances have been scheduled in county libraries-the largest number since the program began.

Clemson Breaks Into the Top 10 in Library Automation

by George Alexander

Why is Clemson featured in this book? First, Clemson installed an integrated library system called NOTIS on a relatively small budget at a time when integrated library systems were large ticket items being installed in a relatively few large libraries. Second, Clemson built upon the NOTIS experience to develop DORIS, making Clemson one of a very few universities providing full-text database access to all faculty, staff, and students.

The Library undertook a systems study in November 1979 to review its need for a system that would support all areas of its operation. These included acquisitions, cataloging, serials support, circulation, and reference. There was also a strong desire to make the library catalog available anywhere.

Given the general system requirements, the study team screened twenty-nine systems available in the market and also estimated the cost of in-house development. In May 1983, the NOTIS package was installed on the mainframe computer, permitting the first online query using LUIS to take place June 2, 1983. Work done by the University of Florida allowed Clemson to be one of the first to use LUIS in a mainframe environment under the MVS operating system.

With this beginning, access to the Clemson catalog was available practically anywhere there were telephones and personal computers. Almost immediately, all campus terminals were connected to the online catalog access software called LUIS. This marriage of the computing network with the library catalog, at a fraction of the costs that other schools had experienced, is what drew attention to Clemson's efforts. Also, the automation of the library's complex operations were begun with very little initial investment.

Because of the success of LUIS, library and computing staff members began to think of other information that could be made available to patrons over the computing network. There were needs emerging throughout the campus for access to full-text data bases, including the campus directory, minutes of university organizations, and various policy manuals. Librarians were very interested in making the more popular databases of the national reference services, BRS and Dialog, available across the computing network.

In June 1987, the BRS/Search software was purchased, introducing the popular DORIS system now in use. DORIS permits searching databases using any terms of interest and, if necessary, Boolean operators between these terms. Today, Clemson is one of only a few universities that make available across a computing network such data bases as the National Newspaper and Magazine Indexes to all faculty, staff, and students.

What next? Certainly more information in both LUIS and DORIS. Perhaps a link between DORIS and LUIS is on the way. We are also in a position now to develop cooperative arrangements with the State Library in Columbia, as well as the libraries of the University of South Carolina. Fortunately, they recently installed the same NOTIS/LUIS system used by Clemson. Perhaps all of the library resources of the State will be available through a shared system in the future.

SELA Representative - Neal Martin
SELA will meet December 4-8 at Opryland along with the Tennessee Library Association. The 1994 convention was originally scheduled to be in Orlando along with the Florida Library Association. FLA has backed out because of an upcoming ALA Convention, so SELA is interested in working with SCLA, perhaps at Hilton Head.

Federal Relations Coordinator - Jim Johnson
The LSCA reauthorization was signed by President Bush, but the administration proposed zero funding for Titles I and II.

Executive Secretary - Drucie Reeves
The Exec. Secretary set up a membership display at the SCASL and LCASL conferences and redesigned the SCLA database to generate more specific membership statistics.
Thanks to all of you who signed the petition at the SCLA Convention at Hilton Head, and to the SCLA Executive Board, the Resource Sharing Roundtable is now a reality. The purpose of the RSR is to present programs and workshops on interlibrary loan, document delivery, and other resource sharing activities. It is also meant to be used as a forum for communication between people involved in these areas. The first group of RSR officers have been chosen and are listed below. The plan for this year's SCLA Convention in Columbia is to co-sponsor a program on OCLC's new EPIC system with the Online Users Roundtable. There will also be a separate business meeting for the group. This will be, in essence, a get-acquainted and planning meeting; all ideas, and all interested parties, will be welcome.

Desktop Publishing Workshop

The Technical Services Section sponsored a workshop on desktop publishing for Macintosh users at the Clemson MacLab May 21, 1990. Thirty four participants from libraries around the state practiced Macintosh and desktop publishing basics. Jerry Devilbiss of Apple Computer, Inc. presented "PageMaker" and Steve Johnson of Clemson and News & Views presented "Ready, Set, Go."

The term "desktop publishing" can include such varied applications as pathfinders, bibliographic guides, flyers, and newsletters printed on ink jet or laser printers as well as sophisticated color brochures printed commercially. Since a one-day workshop can only touch on basic applications, some participants voiced frustration at having only skimmed the idea of desktop publishing. Topics included page layout, columns, word processing, and placing graphics. After a concentrated effort to understand this complex subject, many participants indicated that they could take some desktop publishing ideas back to their libraries.

Technical Services would like to thank Clemson University for the use of the Macintosh lab and the library staff for its invaluable assistance. A special thanks also to Marsh McCurley who arranged for the demonstrations and equipment and provided a selected desktop publishing bibliography.

1989 Summer Reading Program Receives Award

Printed materials for the 1989 Summer Reading Program sponsored by the South Carolina State Library and local county libraries have received a 1990 Bronze ADDY Award. Given by the Columbia, South Carolina Advertising Club, the award recognizes excellence in printed materials. The graphic artist/designer was Susan Craig of Columbia who developed the theme "Sail the Seven Seas With Captain Book: Discover Hidden Treasure at the Library" using a colorful pirate and a coastal background on posters and promotional materials. Jane McGregor, Children's Services Consultant, coordinated planning activities. The Florida State Library is adapting these South Carolina materials for use in its 1990 Summer Reading Program.
SCASL Conference a Resounding Success

With over 800 people registered for the SCASL (South Carolina Association of School Librarians) Conference in Columbia at the Radisson Hotel and the Carolina Coliseum, school librarians from around the state renewed partnerships and enthusiasm and began preparing for the information challenges of the 90's. The theme for the March 21-23 Conference was "Access to the 90's: Meeting the Challenges of Information Power."

Fifteen concurrent sessions and six successful practice sessions were offered to conference participants. These sessions encompassed many timely topics from new technologies to reading enticements, from partnerships to management.

Friday's second general multimedia session, presented by Frank Winstead, was rated by many as the highlight of the conference. Winstead's stories and anecdotes made for a lively presentation as he focused on the nature of the teaching/learning process. Several librarians received awards at the Conference. These included Drucie Reeves, who received the President's Award; Betty Anne Smith, who was selected as the 1990 SCASL Media Specialist of the Year; and Dennis Cox, who was named the 1990 School Administrator of the Year.

Librarians and archivists who attended the workshop “Is Your Collection Secure?” heard archivists from three institutions stress the need for proper security in libraries, museums, and archives. Speakers included Jim Cross of Clemson University, Sharon Bennett of the Charleston Museum, and Linda Aaron of the University of Georgia.

Cross stated that in the period 1979-1989 over $4 million of rare books and manuscripts were stolen from libraries in the United States and that over half that amount was taken by employees of the institutions affected. “The need for security begins within the repository,” Cross stated.

Bennett explained several ways in which collections are made secure. “The most effective method is through the screening of researchers by the use of a research application form,” she said. “But the use of plastic, decoy cameras in the reading room also works,” she added. Bennett also described the difficulties brought about by hurricane Hugo and how competing needs of preservation and security were balanced. Her slide presentation dramatically depicted the devastation caused by the storm.

Aaron recounted the recent thefts at her institution and the lengthy trial that followed. She advised each archivist or librarian to keep accurate and complete records of their purchases, acquisitions, and donations. “You must be able to prove in a court of law that the library actually owns its holdings,” she stressed. At the University of Georgia the crucial piece of evidence, and the evidence on which the outcome of the trial rested, was a photocopy of a catalog card.

In the afternoon the participants toured Special Collections of the Thomas Cooper Library, the South Carolina Department of Archives and History, and the South Caroliniana Library. Among the items on display were rare books, incunabula, and the South Carolina ordinance of secession.

Forty participants attended the one day workshop sponsored by the Archives and Special Collections Roundtable at Davis College on the USC campus.
