Studies in Scottish Literature

Editorial Board
Ian Campbell
David Daiches
Robert L. Kindrick
A. M. Kinghorn
Walter Scheps

Hugh MacDiarmid
(member, founding Editorial Board)
Table of Contents

Editorial Note ................................................................................................................. vii

"They will not leave me, the lives of other people": The Poetry of Douglas Dunn
  David Williams ................................................................................................... 1

Lord Gifford and his Lectures: The First Year (1888-1889)
  Eugene Thomas Long ...................................................................................... 25

Disillusionment with the French Revolution: The Case of the Scottish Physician John Moore
  Henry L. Fulton ................................................................................................ 46

"Horrible Anarchy": James Boswell's View of the French Revolution
  Marlies K. Danziger ......................................................................................... 64

Story and Fable in the Purgatorial Ghost Stories of George Mackay Brown
  Marco Zagnoli .................................................................................................. 77

"Closer than an Eye": The Interconnection of Stevenson's Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde
  Colin Manlove .................................................................................................. 87
In the South Seas
Robert L. Hillier ............................................................................................... 104

R. L. Stevenson's Scottish Christmas Story: "The Misadventures of John Nicholson", The Free Church, and the Prodigal Son
Kenneth Gelder .............................................................................................. 122

A "sickly sort of refinement": The Problem of Sentimentalism in Mackenzie's The Man of Feeling
William J. Burling ........................................................................................... 136

Urbanity in an Urban Dialect: The Poetry of Tom Leonard
Ronald K. S. Macaulay .................................................................................. 150

Double Jeopardy and the Chameleon Art in James Hogg's Justified Sinner
Douglas Jones ................................................................................................. 164

James Hogg and "Mr. W.W.": A New Parody of Wordsworth
David Groves .................................................................................................. 186

Construction of Meaning in MacDiarmid's "Drunk Man"
Christopher Whyte ........................................................................................ 199

"The Vortex of the Tumult": Order and Disorder in Humphry Clinker
R. S. Krishnan ................................................................................................. 239

Scottish Poetry 1985-1986
Roderick Watson ............................................................................................ 254

Notes and Documents ........................................................................................ 272

Book Reviews ................................................................................................... 274

Contributors ..................................................................................................... 315

Index ............................................................................................................... 318
Editor's Note

The Editor regrets that a new computer program made it impossible to produce right justification, different type sizes, footnotes, umlauts and other things which had been incorporated in the previous volume. It is hoped that with Volume 24 we shall be able to achieve the same standard as with Volume 22.

Publications which have a small circulation and yet must, like Studies in Scottish Literature, pay their own way are at a real disadvantage when it comes to creating camera-ready copy which meets a high standard. They are not always able to produce the sort of copy they desire, and are not infrequently misled by people pushing their particular software. Program hucksters seem to be the linear descendents of the old horse trader.

So with apologies for the appearance of the present volume, the Editor hopes that the next one will have the problems solved. Readers of SSL will recognize, he feels confident, that there has been no decline in the quality of contributions to the volume.